What is urbanization?

This is when you make an area more urban. This is done by using gentrification or by taking a rural place and removing natural resources or green space, to make room for buildings and roads.

Some Things in Urban Anthropology

Social Stratification

How power dynamics and social hierarchies manifest in urban settings. These can be from class, ethnicity/race, and gender.

Gentrification

This is the process of a higher value or higher income property coming into a community and changing the character of that community. When a working class or vacant area turns into middle class or commercial.

There is a broad question on if Gentrification is a bad thing. The answer is yes because it always leads to displacement.

Displacement is the involuntary relocation of current residences or businesses. Where Gentrification is involved, there are usually low income to working class residences or businesses.

What is Urban Anthropology

Urban Anthropologist's focus on studying the Social, Political, and cultural dynamics within cities. Urban Anthropologist's examine how urban environments shape people's lives and what makes up their lives.

How does an Anthropologist study urban places

An Anthropologist will primarily use Ethnographic methods. Some of these methods include: Participant observation, in-depth interviews, and document analysis. An Anthropologist will also look at historical data and maps to watch the development of the area occur.
